The journey from find to showroom

An evolving assortment takes shape through the selection of individual objects, new arrivals, and opportunities to discover pieces before their showroom debut.

Carved details, rediscovered for another setting.

Always Discovering

HIGH POINT, NORTH CAROLINA / FALL 2026

The collection visitors encounter at Collected by Schwung is one moment in an ongoing process. Before an object reaches the showroom, it has already prompted a decision: something about its form, material, workmanship, or character made it worth bringing into the collection.

That act of selection connects the brand's antiques, furniture, lighting, art, and accessories. The assortment develops through successive discoveries, with new arrivals introducing different periods, techniques, and possibilities for interiors.

Collected by Schwung has shared this process through its New Arrivals mailings and Exclusive Preview initiative. The latter has offered clients an opportunity to discover and reserve selected incoming pieces before their in-person showroom debut. It brings an earlier stage of the collecting journey into view, allowing interest in an object to begin before its arrival.

For designers, this evolving selection creates a reason to return. A subsequent visit may reveal a piece suited to a project that was not yet underway at the previous one. For collectors, it leaves room for the unexpected encounter: an object that becomes compelling without having appeared on a list.

Fall High Point Market 2026 provides a setting in which to explore that approach in person. Visitors can consider individual finds, see how they relate to other pieces, and speak with the team about the collection.

The showroom is where these separate journeys meet. From there, objects move into homes, projects, and personal collections, while the search continues.
