Drawing inspiration from nature's quiet moments, Linsey's work explores finding peace amidst uncertainty. Her atmospheric pieces combine soft pastel and charcoal on raw birch panels, responding directly to the natural grain patterns of the wood. By gradually building up and blending fine powder layers alongside intuitive marks, she continuously refines each composition as the medium interacts with the substrate. To finish, a hand-applied cold wax imparts warmth and a quiet softness while sealing the medium in place. Through rich layered textures, expressive marks, and subtle tonal variations, Linsey's process yields organic, deeply evocative landscapes.

The exhibition is free to attend and open to both the interior design trade and the general public throughout Fall Market 2026.
