Linon Powell Group Expands High Point Presence and Introduces More Than 320 New Products

Additional showroom space and continued category expansion reflect the company's investment in becoming a broader home furnishings resource for retailers

MINEOLA, N.Y. — October 2, 2026 — Linon Powell Group will significantly expand its presence at the upcoming Fall High Point Market, adding approximately 9,500 square feet of showroom space and introducing more than 320 new products across its growing portfolio of home furnishings brands and categories.

The expanded showroom will provide additional space for the company's growing brand, KYVOS, a RTA, toolless assembly modular seating collection, new Coast to Coast introductions and a broad assortment of furniture and home décor across dining, outdoor, occasional, accent furniture, bath vanities and other categories.

Approximately 120 of the new introductions will come from Coast to Coast, reflecting Linon Powell Group's continued investment in the brand following its 2025 acquisition of Coast-to-Coast Imports. The new assortment expands the company's offering of trend-right accent furniture and décor across a range of styles and price points.

"When people think about Linon and Powell, they may still think of us as an accent company, a dining company or a youth furniture company," said Demetrios Jim Ziozis, CEO of Linon Powell Group. "Those categories are still very important to us, but they are no longer the whole story. We have become a much broader resource, and this market will give us the opportunity to show customers how much the company has grown."

The company has also continued to expand KYVOS, its modular seating platform designed around adaptable configurations and simplified assembly. The additional showroom space will allow Linon Powell Group to present a substantially larger selection of KYVOS seating and supporting products in a more complete branded environment.

Other areas of expansion include outdoor furniture, dining, bath vanity and new licensed programs, including the company's recently introduced Frank Lloyd Wright bathroom vanity collections.

Linon Powell Group is also preparing to launch a new assortment of bed frames, mattress foundations and platform bases scheduled to begin shipping in the coming months. Available in multiple sizes, the new products will emphasize practical features important to both retailers and consumers, including toolless assembly and simplified setup. Although most samples are not expected to arrive in time for Fall Market, the company will preview the program through a dedicated sales presentation for interested retail partners.

Linon Powell Group has supported its product growth with additional investments in inventory and distribution. The company currently maintains more than $50 million in sellable inventory across multiple distribution centers, with more than 200,000 additional units expected to arrive over the next 60 days.

“This is a very significant investment in product, design, inventory and the future of the company,” Ziozis said. “At a time when retailers are looking to work with fewer, stronger suppliers, we believe we are in a position to offer them the breadth that may have previously required three, four or even five different companies.”

The Fall Market presentation is intended to demonstrate the evolution of Linon Powell Group from a collection of category-specific businesses into a more complete home furnishings resource. While each brand maintains its individual identity and product strengths, the broader portfolio gives retailers access to a larger range of categories, aesthetics and opening-to-better price points through one supplier.

“We see a great deal of opportunity ahead of us,” Ziozis added. “We have made the investments, expanded the product and strengthened the inventory position. Now we are looking forward to getting customers into the showroom and showing them the company we have become.”

Retailers and industry partners are encouraged to contact their Linon Powell Group sales representative to schedule a showroom appointment for Fall High Point Market.
