ARTWORK

ARTWORK

*Some of these begin a century ago.
Some begin in a single drawing.*

A painting borrowed from a museum wall is only as convincing as the object it arrives in. That object is ours.

We could have printed on anything. We went to Tokushima.

Tokushima is a prefecture on Shikoku, in the south of Japan.
The mill is a local train further on, then a 15-minute walk, in a village called Yoshinogawa where the mountains and rivers supply both the water and the fibre.

The Fujimori family has made washi paper there for more than 300 hundred years. 8 generations.
Nothing added but mountain water and plant fibre.

Awagami paper is the reason certain of these prints look the way they do.
Ink settles differently into a sheet made this way. The surface carries a faint irregularity that no machine imitates and no screen reproduces. You have to be holding it.

AN ARTWORK IS FOUR THINGS
IMAGE, PAPER, MOUNT, FRAME

200 years separate the oldest image in this chapter from the newest.
What they have in common is how they were turned into objects.

An artwork is not the image. An artwork is the image, the paper it is printed on, the mount that holds it, and the frame that carries all of it on the wall. Get one of the four wrong and the whole thing is wrong. A good print in a poor frame is a poor object.

Every frame in this book was built by a cabinetmaker. Not a framer. The same joints, the same veneers, the same gilding as the furniture, at a quarter of the scale and with none of the forgiveness.

We make all four.

Each sits in a field of gold leaf, laid on by hand and distressed until it holds shadow.

First Light of Flight is four photographs from the years the sky was first explored. Nadar over Paris in a balloon. Zeppelins. The Wright brothers, barely off the ground.

Look again. Each one is a pair.

Two near-identical images, side by side, because around 1900 you slid a card like this into a viewer and the scene stood up off the card. The first 3D. And every one of them was taken by a man under a black cloth who took off the lens cap, held the world still for 6 seconds, and put it back on.

That is what the sky looked like the first time anybody photographed it from above.

CAST, THEN FRAMED

Cameo Profiles began with Roman plaster cameos, where a portrait was cut back to what actually survives of a face. Profile, relief, proportion. Ornaments of Legacy began with three motifs architects once cut into buildings and meant sincerely: the ribbon, the crown of olive, the sun.

We cast them again. The same skill that turns out eighteen thousand hardware designs, pointed at a Roman profile and a crown of olive.

Then framed them, set into concentric mats stepped inward, so the eye falls into the object rather than across it.

*“The foundry was built to make hardware.
It has been persuaded to do other things.”*
