HIGH POINT - Furniture industry veteran Jared Worrall has joined boutique leather upholstery supplier Olivia & Quinn as its president.

This represents the first top job for Worrall, who has 14 years of executive industry experience.

"This marks my inaugural role as president," Worrall told Furniture Today. "Joining Olivia & Quinn is an exciting step in my career. The company's dedication to quality and innovation mirrors my professional ethos. I am eager to lead Olivia & Quinn into a future rich with growth, pioneering designs and market leadership."

Worrall began his industry career at Andmore, formerly known as International Market Centers, where he served as director of leasing for seven years. He then was a sales manager at Furnitureland South's flagship store in Jamestown, N.C., before becoming vice president of sales for the Western region at Universal Furniture.

Subsequently, he took an executive sales position at furniture manufacturer Mobital Design and then served as national sales manager for Classic Home. Most recently, he served as vice president of sales at West Coast furniture supplier Bassman Blaine.

Worrall says his initial goals as president will be to expand the company's market focus and to evolve its product line, "ensuring it resonates with the sophisticated needs of our discerning customers."

Olivia & Quinn will exhibit at the April High Point Market in the International Home Furnishings Center, at Interhall 307 and 309. The company sources leathered upholstered products from around the world.
